Earl Trotter was born in 1888 in Jamaica, the daughter of a freed slave. Her family was poor, and she had to work from a young age to help make ends meet. However, Earl was a bright and ambitious young woman and she was determined to make a better life for herself.

In 1900, Earl's family moved to Panama, which was then under construction by the United States. Earl quickly learned English and Spanish, and she soon found work as a teacher. She also became involved in the Caribbean community, and she quickly became a respected leader.

In 1910, Earl married a Jamaican-born businessman named William Trotter. Together, they had six children. Earl continued to work as a teacher, and she also opened a small shop where she sold goods from Jamaica.

Earl became increasingly involved in the fight for civil rights for the Caribbean community in Panama. She was a co-founder of the West Indian League, which fought for the rights of West Indian immigrants in Panama. She also worked to improve education and healthcare for the Caribbean community.

Earl Trotter was a pioneer for the Caribbean community in Panama. She was a strong advocate for civil rights, and she worked tirelessly to improve the lives of her people. She is remembered as a remarkable woman who made a significant contribution to the history of Panama.
