Background

The Battle of Chancellorsville was fought in the context of the American Civil War, which began in 1861 when the Confederate States of America seceded from the United States. The war was fought over the issue of slavery, with the Union supporting the abolition of slavery and the Confederacy supporting the preservation of slavery.

In the spring of 1863, the Union Army of the Potomac, led by General Joseph Hooker, launched a campaign to capture the Confederate capital of Richmond, Virginia. Hooker's army was much larger than the Confederate Army of Northern Virginia, led by General Robert E. Lee. However, Lee was a brilliant tactician and he was able to use his smaller army to defeat Hooker at the Battle of Chancellorsville.

The Battle

The Battle of Chancellorsville began on April 30, 1863, when Hooker's army crossed the Rappahannock River and attacked the Confederate positions at Chancellorsville. Lee responded by dividing his army and sending one corps to attack Hooker's flank. This attack was successful and Hooker's army was forced to retreat.

On May 2, 1863, Lee launched a second attack on Hooker's army. This attack was also successful and Hooker's army was forced to retreat again. The Battle of Chancellorsville ended on May 6, 1863, with the Confederate army victorious.

Aftermath

The Battle of Chancellorsville was a tactical victory for the Confederates, but a strategic victory for the Union. The Confederate army was able to inflict heavy casualties on the Union army, but the Union army was still able to continue its campaign against Richmond.

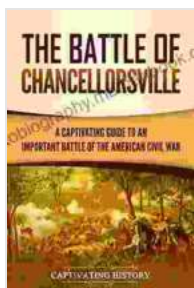

The Battle of Chancellorsville also had a significant impact on the war. The Confederate victory boosted morale and gave the Confederacy hope that it could win the war. The Union defeat, on the other hand, led to a loss of confidence in Hooker and his leadership.

Legacy

The Battle of Chancellorsville is considered to be one of the most important battles in the American Civil War. The battle demonstrated the brilliance of Robert E. Lee as a tactician and it also showed that the Confederate army was still a formidable force.

The Battle of Chancellorsville is also remembered for the death of Confederate General Thomas "Stonewall" Jackson. Jackson was one of the most respected generals in the Confederate army and his death was a major blow to the Confederacy.
